

2025 年度 大学院社会人入試 (英文学専攻)

基礎英語 模範解答

(1) Every morning, I take the same train to go to work. The train leaves London Paddington at 8:15am. And every morning she is always standing at the front end of the second carriage, reading a book. I cannot do anything but admire her because she is so beautiful. I don't know if she ever notices me looking at her. One day I decided to give her a card. That was St Valentine's Day. I bought a really special card. I took the best of my courage to approach her and said "hi, my name is John, and I thought I'd give this to you." She looked so surprised. "I left my number in the card, so please give me a call", and I left.

(2) I just decided to give someone I've never spoken to a card on St Valentine's Day. I know that's really crazy, and I don't know what I was doing really, but I just couldn't help falling in love with the man I always see standing in the same train every morning as I go to work. The day before, I went to a card shop to buy a card and wrote down everything I felt about him in my heart. The special day came. I tried to stand as close as possible to him and tried to catch the best moment to speak to him. But then, all of a sudden, he came forward to him and took out something from his pocket. A card. He gave me the card. But it's not just a card. It's the same card I bought for him. He introduced himself to me, but without saying much he left. I opened the card and read. I just couldn't believe. He was also in love with me! I immediately left the train just before it was leaving, and called the number that was in it.

(3) As I travel to work, I often enjoy watching people in the train, reading books, watching their mobile phones, or sleeping. But this was the most unexpected event I'd ever seen. The man, looking very serious, approached a woman. I thought the man was going to harass her and that perhaps I should do something about it. But all that the man did to her was to give her a card. After exchanging a few words, he left her and got off the train. She opened the card and read it, and she started to jump up in joy. She got off the train and called someone on her mobile.